

Glacier 2010 by Alex Metcalf

The first day, we drove to Farregut, where we had camped for Silverwood.

On day two, we rode the roller coasters in Silverwood for a while. We also had a spelling test, and coined the catch phrase for the trip: "Have more fun!" Austin and Mark met up with us just after midnight.

The third day was all driving, our convoy drove for a long time, part of it through Glacier, and slept in an awesome tepee.

On day four, we started hiking. After getting our packs ready, we drove to the drop-off point, and waited for Dave and Tom to finish the shuttle. We played 13 for about 3 hours, and ate from the snack box. We hiked about 6 miles, from Many Glacier to Poia lake.

Day five. A big day. The trail was roughly 11 miles long, peaking at Redgap pass. Incredible views, and we played more 13, for three hours.

Day six was nice and level. About 10 miles, ending at Glens lake.

Day seven was decent. We hiked to Stoney Indian. We gained about 2000 feet of altitude.

Day eight was insane. We hiked 22 miles. We touched the continental divide, and looked at Sue Lake Overlook. We did some night hiking, and a bear wandered by during the night. More 13 being played, with 8 of the clubs being the unlucky card.

Day nine. We drove to a hotel with a hot tub, and visited Canada.

Day ten. We drove home. Slept.
